Conclusions drawn from the information collected above and how are faculty collectively involved in drawing conclusions	1) 81% (22 out of 27) of the evaluations forms in the practicum showed satisfaction from the employers with the skills and knowledge that the student obtained in the course work. 2) 100% (8 out of 8) of the students surveyed expressed overall satisfaction with the skills and knowledge obtained 3) 60% (3 out of 5) of the students surveyed secured employment in a construction field after graduation 4) 58% (7 out of 12) of graduates from AY 12 continued educational training within the University of Alaska.	1) 85% (6 out of 7) of the evaluations forms in the practicum showed satisfaction from the employers with the skills and knowledge that the students obtained in the course work. 2) 100% (2 out of 2) of the students surveyed expressed overall satisfaction with the skills and knowledge obtained 3) 71% (5 out of 7) of the students surveyed secured employment in a construction field after graduation 4) 25% (3 out of 12) of graduates from AY 13 continued educational training within the University of Alaska.	1) 91% (11 out of 12) of the evaluation forms in the practicum showed satisfaction from the employers with the skills and knowledge that the students obtained in the course work. 2) %100 (3 of 3) of the student surveyed expressed overall satisfaction with the skills and knowledge obtained 3) %0 (0 out of 2) of the students surveyed secured employment in a construction field after graduation 4) 33% (1 out of 3) of graduates from AY 14 continued educational training within the University of Alaska.

Curricular changes resulting from conclusions drawn above		4) The continued educational training rate is lower than predicted due to the low graduate amount, but is expected to rebound. The co-hort model that the CTT program operates under causes years of extreme high and low graduate amounts
