

Design A Grass Basket

Paint a basket design inspired by natural plant dyes!

People across Alaska use bark, berries, and leaves of various plants to make colorful dyes. One way to use these dyes is to color beach grass, then weave it into baskets. Try making your own colorful basket design!

Left: Coiled Grass Basket by Lizzie Chimiugak, UA81-003-0078AB.

Materials Needed:

Grass Basket printable (or draw your own), watercolor paints, paintbrushes, water, paper towels. Optional: paper, pencil, crayons or colored pencils.

Instructions:

Step 1: Look at the basket pictures on the next page. What colors do you see? What kind of patterns did the artist make?

Step 2: Plan your own grass basket design. Think about what kinds of colors will be in your design. You can copy a design from the basket pictures, or come up with your own!

Optional: Sketch a picture of your design on white paper.

Step 3: Use watercolors to paint your design on the grass basket template. (You could also use crayons or colored pencils.) Try to use colors you could make with plant dyes. Which plant could produce each color?

Step 4: Let your artwork dry, and show it to your friends or family!

Extension: Think about what other materials you could color with plant dyes: fabric, yarn, paper, food, etc. Draw or paint a picture of a colorful object made with plant dyes!

Plant Dyes in Alaska

People across Alaska use bark, berries, and leaves of various plants to make colorful dyes. Here are a few examples:

- The Dena'ina people traditionally use highbush cranberries or currants to make red, and blueberries for purple.
- The Gwich'in Athabascan people traditionally use the berries of the strawberry spinach plant to make red, the leaves of lambsquarters for gold, and alder bark for orange.
- The Yup'ik people traditionally dye beach grass pink with lowbush cranberries and black with crowberries.
- You can also use raspberries to make purple, cloudberry for pink, or soapberries for red.

Dyeing fabric with blueberries.

Plants are used to dye materials such as beach grass, porcupine quills, hides, birchbark, fabric, and yarn. In Yup'ik cultures, artists traditionally dye beach grass, then weave it into baskets. Look at these basket designs!

*Maker unknown
UA67-098-0263*

*Maker: Maria Flynn
UA70-053-0083*

*Maker: Theresa Smart
UA84-003-0084AB*

*Maker: Betsy Altsuk
UA81-003-0160AB*

*Maker unknown
UA2001-013-0319AB*

*Maker unknown
UA2018-011-0068*

Grass Basket Printable

