Julia Duin has been a reporter for the Houston Chronicle and was an assistant national editor for The Washington Times for more than 14 years. More recently, she was a frequent writer for the Washington Post Sunday magazine and Style section along with the Wall Street Journal, the Economist and CNN.com. She's earning a second master's degree this fall, has written five books and has covered events from Iceland and Israel to Iraq and India having to do with religion, foreign policy, education and politics.

These lectures are made possible by a generous endowment from the late Helen Snedden in honor of her late husband, C.W. Snedden, former Fairbanks Daily-News Miner owner and publisher.
