PS 475, Internship in Public Affairs

PS 475 provides UAF students the opportunity to gain experience in government, politics, and public affairs while earning three college credits. Students may serve as interns in the fall or spring semester, or the 12-week summer session; minimum required hours: 140.

Placement

The PS 475 instructor insures that the placement meets student needs and satisfies university requirements (for example, that an agency employee guides and supervises the student's work). Recent placements in Fairbanks include: governor's office, offices of state legislators, US Senators Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski, Bureau of Land Management, Alaska District Attorney, Public Defender, Fairbanks North Star Borough (mayor's office, planning & zoning), city of Fairbanks. Some students have worked in non-profit organizations (e.g., American Red Cross, the Northern Center, Tanana Chiefs Conference), on political campaigns for president, governor, and legislator, and on initiative campaigns. Students also intern at Washington DC offices of the Alaska congressional delegation. Students may gain UAF credit for participation in the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives and other national internship programs.

Stipend?

A few paid internships are available (for example, at congressional offices); these are competitive. Some offices provide small stipends to defray the intern's travel costs. Most internships are not compensated.

Requirements

Students' grades in PS 475 are based on how well they satisfy these criteria:

- Performance as an intern: meeting agency expectations for hours worked, completion of tasks assigned, good work habits (e.g., punctuality, reliability, demonstration of respect for agency clients and staff), apparel and conduct appropriate to office norms. The supervisor evaluates these performance criteria, and this evaluation is a basis for the course grade.
- 2. Analytical paper. The student writes a paper of at least 10 pages in length, evaluating the internship experience in the context of the broader field of government, politics, or public affairs to which it relates. Standard college norms for English composition and citation apply. The instructor develops the reading list including at least one book and several articles form the professional literature in political science before the internship begins. Readings are specific to the individual internship. The instructor evaluates the student's log of activity in the agency and the paper. The instructor consults with the agency supervisor, and determines the grade based on these factors.

Value

The internship experience offers students a practical introduction to the world of governments, non-profits and private organizations active in public issues. Some students use the internship experience to gain part- or full-time employment in the agencies they've worked for. The American Political Science Association recognizes internships, such as PS 475, as a critical element of undergraduate education in political science.

Outcomes Assessment

Two aspects of PS 475 may contribute to the PS department's outcome assessment:

- 1. Review of papers completed by student interns
- 2. Survey of agency supervisors regarding quality of work performed by interns.
